Historical Note

In June of 1909 the mission of St. Benedict the Moor was established on Milwaukee's near north side to serve the small community of African American Catholics located in that neighborhood. In 1911 the Capuchins came to the mission and the present church was built. By 1912 they opened the country's first African American Mission School. The school would eventually encompass a boarding, day school, and high school. In 1931 the capuchins opened St. Anthony's Hospital – Milwaukee's first integrated hospital - and ran it until 1980. The parish and school continued to thrive until the construction of a new freeway cut through the elementary school's playground – forcing it to close. The freeway fractured the parish's neighborhood as well and many had to relocate when their homes were razed.
